WATER RESOURCES

PHASE 2: HYDRATION STATION UPGRADES

On June 6, 2022, City Council awarded a construction contract in the amount of $136,483 for “Hydration Station Upgrades, Project No. 428-71073.” The contractor for this project was awarded to Diamond Construction & Design (Contractor). The contract for this project consisted of the installation of four drinking fountains as part of the Phase 2 Hydration Station Upgrades project. The Phase 2 fountain locations are identified in the red circled areas on the map below. Work for Phase 2 portion of the project is now complete.

TAP WATER VS BOTTLED WATER

Save your money and the environment, and drink from the tap!

Tap water comes from wells, lakes, rivers, or reservoirs. This water passes through a water treatment process before being piped into homes and businesses. Before it reaches your home, water undergoes several methods to remove potential contaminants. During disinfection, chemicals may be added to kill any remaining microbes and protect you against germs. These steps utilize chemicals and energy, resulting in an environmental impact. Still, the overall ecological effects of tap water are significantly less than bottled. Bottled water is much more expensive than tap water. On average, bottled water can cost from $1.30 to $14.00 per gallon. The tap water at the highest rate charged by the City of Pomona, a gallon of water, will cost you 0.45 cents. Using a reusable water bottle will save you money and reduce plastic pollution.

Most people prefer bottled water because they think it's safer to drink. Bottled water comes from a variety of sources. Bottle companies will often use tap water, while others use spring water. Some people prefer bottled water because it may be more convenient than tap water. However, there are concerns surrounding its safety and environmental impact. The US EPA regulates public drinking water supplies, as the Safe Drinking Water Act requires. In addition, tap water must meet strict federal and state regulations for safety and quality.

One of the main drawbacks of bottled water is its environmental impact. From treating and bottling to transportation and refrigeration, bottled water requires large amounts of energy, and after a single use, most plastic bottles end up in landfills or bodies of water. This is particularly problematic, as plastic bottles have been shown to release toxins as they degrade. In addition, most bottled water comes in plastic, made from petroleum products. Research has shown that bottled water may absorb chemicals, such as phthalates, from the plastic bottle and trace amounts of chemicals introduced into the water during production. Some products may harbor small pieces of plastic called microplastics. Research suggests that microplastics promote inflammation and other adverse health effects over time. Finally, even the brands of water that are distributed in glass bottles still have a significant carbon footprint.
